Description: Proficiency rates climb in Washoe County schools

Students in Washoe County School District are showing improvement in critical core studies.

Superintendent Pedro Martinez presented criterion-referenced test results today. The tests are designed to measure whether students in third through eighth grade are meeting Nevada state standards in reading, math and science. Martinez says the test results reveal this is third straight year they have seen gains across all schools.

News 4 is taking a closer look at the results and will have more information on News 4 at 5.

Description: AYP reports released for Nevada schools

The 2011-12 Adequate Yearly Progress School Designations reports have been released for the schools in the state of Nevada. Shocking results released today about Adequate Yearly Progress for our schools. We all know Nevada schools are in need of improvement, but the results released about Washoe County do not paint a good picture. News 4's Karen Griffin has been digging into the numbers.

The scariest statistic in Washoe County is from our middle schools. Of the 16 middle schools, a whopping 13 are in need of improvement, two are on the watch list. Only one school - Washoe Inspire Academy, is adequate.

It's also important to point out that this report also shows there are many success stories across the state. We'll highlight some of those tonight on News 4 at eleven. If you'd like to see how your child's school is doing log onto mynews4.com. We've got the full list on our website.

Description: TMCC holds open house

Even though it's the weekend, Truckee Meadows Community College was buzzing with students. Today was the school's orientation day for the Division of Business, where current and future TMCC students could tour the campus and speak with college faculty. The orientation also featured a few crash-course seminars students could attend to help them prepare for college.
